Nashville's Grand Ole Opry Scheduled To Reopen With New Church Pew Type Seating Manufactured By Dumas Manufacturing of Grove Hill, Alabama

Nashville's Grand Ole Opry is scheduled to reopen in September, 2010 with new church pew type seating manufactured by Dumas Manufacturing of Grove Hill, Alabama. Much of the city of Nashville was flooded on May 2, including the Grand Ole Opry House. The interior of the auditorium was covered by 46 inches of water, destroying most of the Opry's interior furnishings, including the seating. When the water subsided, and it was clear that all the seating had to be replaced, Gaylord Entertainment (owners of the Opry) chose Dumas Manufacturing to manufacture and install the new pew type seating.

Dumas Manufacturing was chosen to manufacture and install the new Grand Ole Opry seating because of their excellent reputation for quality and over 80 years of experience manufacturing the very best hardwood church pews and church furniture. The project was massive, requiring over a half mile of lumber to manufacture the 205 pews. The pews were manufactured in the Dumas manufacturing facility in Alabama, transported to Nashville and then assembled and installed by Dumas technicians. Bruce Johnson, Dumas Manufacturing Manager said, "The Grand Ole Opry is such an important icon to America's history and Dumas was humbled to be a part of such an extraordinary event. We are very proud Gaylord Entertainment chose Dumas to be a part of their restoration project."

As one of the oldest church pew and church furniture manufacturers in the country, Dumas understands that excellence in workmanship, attention to details and personal service are the most important qualities of any company.
